Should be a space between “Of course”-- spelling mistakes/typos should reeeeeeally be avoided.

Don't You Just Want That
Amazing Look...Ofcourse
You Do!

Also, here and on other text fields-- I am a bigger fan of not trying to capitalize things like nouns/verbs, because it can lead to inconsistency or, even when technically correct, a reader might have to pause to think if it's right or not-- which distracts from what you actually want.

So, I would suggest here and in all other titles, just capitalize the first word of a label/text, and then just first words in sentences, proper nouns, etc.:

→ “Don’t you just want that amazing look? Of course you do!”

These should all be in a single row; they are oddly split at the moment

Again for uniformity: each text block should be the same number of lines, because otherwise the spacing of the images isn't uniform, which looks odd. I would recommend always having 2 lines per text block; you can add newlines to headings that are too short, and trim back ones that are too long. Each image should have the same x-y dimensions, as well.

As suggested on last slide, all these should have 2 rows of text, for uniform spacing.

The centers of all of these should be aligned- more visually pleasing.

About

This “About” link at the top of the pages doesn’t go to the About page, it goes to the About blurb (below), from which one goes to the actual About page when clicking on “Read detail.” I think the top-page link should just go directly to the full About page, and not have this intermediate step.

“Phone number” description stuff appears in multiple places... just need one, such as the great with the “i.e., +254...”; NB: I think instead of “i.e.”, you would want “e.g.” or “for example”.

This is the first thing I see when clicking on the website-- surely there should be some fabric pattern(s) shown here, some color, to grab the viewer's attention, and so they know what this site is about? It doesn't have to be a huge amount, which might make the text hard to read, but how about a couple rectangles to the right and left of the "Don't you just want that amazing look..." text?
